Description:

In October of this year, the Federal Communications Commission initiated a proceeding seeking a resurrection of net neutrality, a zombie the agency first created in 2010. Broadly speaking, net neutrality stands for the controversial proposition that broadband Internet access service ("BIAS") should be regulated as a telephone utility. A cause celebre, its proponents and detractors generally fall into party lines: Democratic administrations for – Republican ones against.

Sapronov & Associates is pleased to once again collaborate with West LegalEdcenter to bring you Part II of our Net Neutrality Series, "Net Neutrality Redux: FCC Resurrects its 2015 Open Internet Rules.

Discussion topics will include:

- Overview of NPRM
  - o What (if anything) is different from the 2015 rules
- What are the key issues associated with net neutrality
  - From proponents'/opponents' perspective?
    - o Is net neutrality still even relevant
      - Politically?
      - Culturally?
    - o Is net neutrality addressing "real" issues
      - Are customers in the U.S. getting all the benefits they deserve and how does this compare to other countries
      - Online safety / fraud
      - What is the rationale for giving "Big Tech" an exemption from net neutrality rules?
    - o How would the rules effect emerging technology (e.g., 5-G, AI)
  - What is to be expected and what could happen re: coming elections?
    - o Will the rules survive?
    - o What is the "Major Questions" Doctrine and how will it likely be invoked to strike down the new rules?
      - If the Republicans prevail, how would (could) they repeal the new rules?
      - Or will they wait to see if Courts overturn?
    - o Possible litigation:
      - Summary of past litigation
      - Possible arguments, strategy, and likelihood of success this time around
